Gunpoint Medicine Now Includes Vaccination Tyranny

(The Best Years in Life) A young couple in Birmingham, Alabama were forced into vaccinating their newborn with the Hep-B (HBV) vaccination with threats of legally abducting their healthy newborn baby son and giving him away. Gunpoint medicine just got worse.

There have been many reports of chemo by force on minors living with parents who refuse it because they're being harmed. It has become a common practice by mainstream medicine to have Child Protective Services (CPS), often a misnomer for what they actually do, take custody of the child and force chemo and/or radiation on him or her. If there is resistance, sometime the parents are arrested.

That's gunpoint chemo. They do it because they can. Because they have the full force and support of the medical authority, the complete legal system, and CPS kidnapping service. Now the medical system in its desperate attempt to keep their vaccine racket afloat is saying vaccinate or lose your child in maternity wards. The recent cruel case at St. Vincent's Hospital in Birmingham, Alabama illustrates this latest frightening trend of medical terrorism.

Your Baby gets the Hep-B Shot or You Lose Him

The Hepatitis B, or Hep-B (HBV) vaccination is the most commonly rejected vaccination in maternity wards. It has been traced as the source of Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS) on hundreds of occasions. That's only where it was traceable. There are probably many more. It is often administered just after birth and usually repeated three times over the next six months. More details on Hep-B vaccination risks versus no benefits here.

And even if it were an effective vaccine, it would be useless unless the mother is infected. That infection is commonly transmitted through injections of shared drug paraphernalia and/or promiscuous sex. The couple, Aliea Bidwell and Ben Gray, who had their baby delivered at St. Vincent's in Birmingham did not engage in either activity.

Aliea and Ben did some really thorough research to decide against allowing the Hep-B vaccination, a decision which they announced upon arriving at the hospital without backlash. For the most part, St. Vincent's Hospital in Birmingham has tolerated parents' wishes to not vaccinate newborns. And it's not illegal in Alabama to refuse vaccinations based on medical or religious beliefs.

Their son, Aaron, was born naturally, easily and in perfect health, per the hospital's records. Several family members, even grandparents, had arrived to see the latest addition to their extended family.

When Dr. Terry M. Bierd, MD appeared as a staff pediatrician at St. Vincent's Hospital in Birmingham, hospital staff was concerned with how she disregarded vaccination refusals. She is further proof of the flawed premise the world's ills can be cured if women ruled. After noticing that neither parent had been tested for hepatitis B recently, although they claimed they had been tested earlier, Dr. Bierd decided to overrule the parents' decision by invoking "doctor discretion" to override the parent's refusal.

Bierd at first claimed that Alabama state law required the vaccination. But when a family member corroborated this was not so from a friend who was a judge, she asserted that doctor discretion allowed her to force the Hep-B vaccine. Without compliance to "doctor's orders", she would legally seize their newborn son, Aaron, and give him away.

She announced this three times with to Aliea and Ben while in the room with baby Aaron. The second announcement came boldly with 12 family members visiting, who all saw the doctor's actions as blackmail.

The staff pediatrician gave them an ultimatum, allow us to vaccinate Aaron with the Hep-B vaccine by tonight (Friday) or we'll take him away. Then you'll have to see what you can do to get him back after the weekend.

What to do when a hospital staff pediatrician tells an extended family the baby's gone, at least for the weekend, then you'll have to see what you can do to recover him after that weekend if the Hep-B shot isn't administered by that Friday evening?

What to do when you have a nutcase with authority while you're trapped? Here's the kicker, were forced to sign a consent form relieving the hospital and its staff of all liability. Folks, having kids in this world has become very difficult. Not only home delivery, but home schooling may be the only way to avoid the medical tyranny imposed on children.

In case you are on a fence with Hep-B vaccinations administered to babies, here's an excerpt from a letter to the Journal of the American Medical Association (JAMA) by a PhD at the University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine, Erdem I. Cantekin

There is no scientific evidence to justify HBV vaccination before the age when those risk factors associated with the HBV transmission (sex, needles, etc.) become relevant. Recent risk-benefit analyses show HBV vaccination among children carries one of the largest unjustified risks and substantial financial costs*, second only to the new controversial conjugate pneumococcal vaccine.* (Emphasis added)
